Fight for Justice

Flowered wreaths, balloons, toys, a table holding an improvised banquet of marshmallows and streamers: Katharina and Michael Lehmann are determined that their son Tom's fifth birthday will be an unforgettable day. Then suddenly, their perfect party is interrupted by the arrival of a police car with its blue lights flashing. In front of all the guests and the children, Michael is arrested and charged with murder! As the police lead Michael away in handcuffs, the bewildered Katharina can only stand there with her children in shocked disbelief...

Michael, a cabinetmaker, and Katharina have a happy, stable family life with their children, Tom and Marie. They recently moved to the country and purchased an old farmhouse, which Michael renovated with the idea of opening a "Bed and Breakfast". They didn't have to wait long for the first guest: the day before Tom's birthday, the elderly Mr Wolters arrives to stay with the Lehmanns. After the terrible events at Tom's party, the friendly Mr Wolters offers Katharina support - which she readily accepts as the case mounts against her husband. He has been accused of murdering a prostitute, and not only was his cell phone discovered in the victim's apartment, but her blood has been found in the Lehmanns' house on a pair of Michael's overalls. The evidence against him is overwhelming, but Michael continues to proclaim his innocence. After he violently loses his temper during the preliminary hearing, Michael is banned from having any visitors - including Katharina. In desperation, she decides to take action and begins her own investigation, but she's soon to discover that going it alone can be dangerous...
