High Society Murder IV

The deli king and jet-setting womanizer Hans-Georg Fischer is found dead in his pool. Psychiatrist Dr. Wendelin Winter is assigned to counsel Fischer's widow. Although the police believe that an overdose of cocaine killed him, Winter suspects that there is more behind it. His suspicions are confirmed when an autopsy reveals a deadly dose of rat poison in addition to the cocaine...

The search for the murderer proves extremely difficult, because Fischer was an arrogant cynic with a lot of enemies. He despised his wife, though she was the driving force behind his success. Enraged at the unjust treatment of his sister, Fischer's brother-in-law detested him. Even Ariane, with whom Fischer had been having an affair, was a target of his cruelty.

Her manic-depressive ex-boyfriend, angry at losing Ariane, is a suspect as well. And could the shy florist who regularly delivered flowers to the Fischers have had a motive?

The investigation becomes even more challenging when the sleazy gossip reporter Jacki goes public with a sensational story - including an incriminating photo - of Fischer's adultery. He uses Winter's daughter Alexandra, who is an intern at his newspaper, to get inside information. Then, Alexandra discovers yet another corpse during her own research into the case... and the florist narrowly escapes a murder attempt. Finally, Winter begins to piece the puzzle together - it was apparently not only flowers that the florist had been delivering...
