Sex & More

It seems that what women really want out of life is as wildly diverse as the women themselves... as we quickly see from our group of four protagonists. One thing is certain - they are all women through and through, which of course means that what they say isn't necessarily what they mean.

Although their attempts to find sex and love at times seem desperate, their comic humor and romantic desires keep them always revved up for the next passionate adventure.

Minza, Valerie, Edda and Frenzy take center stage in "Anything But Sex". As a single mom, Minza is barely able to keep her chaotic life from spinning out of control.

It's not just her rude and defiant brat Sophie that makes things difficult - her hectic, on and off relationship with Phillip surely doesn't help. It's a good thing she's got her three best friends to depend on: the sometimes naïve, always romantic Valerie, who being safely married is always able to offer emotional advice. There's Edda, who loves all men - as long as they keep their distance... and Frenzy, who seems to be in a constant state of trying to figure out who she is and what she feels.

Although their fantasies of life and love are as different as they themselves are, together they're able to navigate the many twists and turns of their individual lives - and also manage to have a blast along the way.
