The Jackpot

The Jackpot

With their newly won riches, the Leenders and Moeses have moved into an upscale neighborhood at the exact time that the arrogant Bestevaer family is facing financial ruin. Despite the clashes of character and social upbringing, the 3 families become far more involved with each other than they first thought possible...

For years, Jaap Leenders has been running his own landscaping company, while his wife-to-be Cindy works as a self-employed manicurist. Both have a child from a previous relationship. They are a hard-working family, and when Jaap wins the lottery, he keeps it to himself.

Stef and Melissa Moes are the exact opposites of the Leenders. He enjoys luxury while Melissa, Cindy's sister, has a strong sense of social justice.

But she also dreams of being a high-society celebrity. Adding to the chaotic, anything-goes atmosphere are their 2 children. When the family hits the jackpot, they immediately go on a wild spending spree, not at all caring about what might come later...

Then there are the Bestevaers, who have been affluent pillars of society for generations. The men hold top positions at blue-chip corporations, while the women organize fundraisers and attend high-society functions. Their sons and daughters, heavily infused with a sense of superiority since childhood, would not dream of marrying below their rank. But then disaster strikes the investment consultant Florian Bestevaer, who gets fired after making a terrible mistake...
