Playing the Game

When Dan is fired from the hospital for being too dedicated to his patients, he's forced to take a job as private nurse to an elderly millionaire in order to pay his bills and his 17-year-old son's alimony.

The only problem is that the millionaire will only accept a female for the position. So Dan makes the bizarre decision to simply go for the job anyway - completely disguised as a woman. His lie fools the old man, and he's hired. Everyday, he takes care of the millionaire and gives him his medicine... all with the clothes and attitude of a caring female nurse. Not only is the old man completely taken in, but he even becomes captivated by his new employee's charm and soon falls in love with "her".

Then a radical change happens. Dan's employer dies and he discovers that the old man's will states that Dan has been left the entire estate. The problem is that the millionaire's private doctor Eddy - the same doctor that had Dan fired from his hospital job - is greedily after the old man's wealth. Eddy's plan involves manipulating his relationship with Irina, the millionaire's daughter, into a marriage and thereby getting his hands on the inheritance. Now that Dan has been named as an heir, Eddy's greed forces him to make drastic changes to his plan, which includes threatening Dan's life...

Further complicating Dan's situation is the fact that he's fallen heavily for Irina, who is far from suspecting that her late father's trustworthy nurse is a man in disguise...
